NUSC 1167 - Food, Culture, and Society

Students will explore food habits and behaviors from other cultures and also learn how world history, economics, and geography have shaped food habits of different populations around the world. Information about health beliefs, nutritional status, and intercultural communication will be covered in the course. For UConn undergraduate students, this course meets the Content Area 4 Diversity and Multiculturalism International requirement under the university’s general education requirements.

3 credits
5-week during Summer Session 1 (June 1 - July 2)
Instructor: Dr. Molika Chea (molika.chea@uconn.edu)
No prerequisites